

Bo Lozoff

1947—2012

"My footsteps quickly disappear into the sand forever. Ah, but that's okay, 'cause where I've been don't matter anyway. If you're looking for me I can still be found though my tracks lead so far out of sight. I'm stumbling toward the light."

—from Bo's first album,
Stumbling Toward The Light

December, 2012

My dear family,

I'm so, so sorry to have to tell you that our beloved Bo Lozoff died in a motorcycle accident on November 29, 2012.

His dedication to all of you was always deeply in his heart. Now, dearhearts, when you want to feel his kind and wise spirit, you can pick up one of the books that Bo has left for all of us, and you'll find him there reaching out from his heart to yours.

It's been almost 40 years since Bo and I began this much-loved work with you. And in that time, we've sent out almost 400,000 copies of We're All Doing Time, as well as hundreds of thousands of other books. I can assure you that I'm more dedicated than ever to getting Bo's beautiful and life-changing books to anyone who requests them – and our newsletter will keep coming as well. This work has always been my calling, just as it was Bo's, and I'll be here with you as long as God wills it.

I love you,
Sita Lozoff
